

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
EASTERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK

NOT FOR PUBLICATION

SMARTWATER, LTD.,

Plaintiff,

- versus -

APPLIED DNA SCIENCES, INC.,,

Defendant.

MEMORANDUM
AND ORDER

12-cv-05731

JOHN GLEESON, United States District Judge:

The plaintiff, SmartWater, in this patent infringement action has decided to drop its claims and has moved to dismiss the case with court permission under Rule 41(a)(2). See Motion to Dismiss, DE 118 (June 18, 2014). The defendant, Applied DNA Sciences (“ADNAS”), seeks to have the dismissal conditioned on an award of attorneys’ fees. The defendant cites for authority both 35 U.S.C. § 285 (a permissive fee-shifting provision of patent law) and Rule 41(a)(2), as well as the court’s inherent authority. Because § 285 is the most specific grant of authority for awarding fees, I consider it first.

Section 285 of the patent law states: “The court in exceptional cases may award reasonable attorney fees to the prevailing party.” The Supreme Court recently held that an “exceptional” case is simply one that “stands out from others with respect to the substantive strength of a party’s litigating position (considering both the governing law and the facts of the case) or the unreasonable manner in which the case was litigated.” Octane Fitness, LLC v. Icon Health & Fitness, Inc., 134 S. Ct. 1749, 1756 (2014). In contrast to the Federal Circuit’s prior interpretation of § 285 overruled by Octane Fitness, the Supreme Court’s understanding does not require a showing of subjective bad faith or objective baselessness of the claim, though if such predicates are found, they clearly bear on the question of fees under § 285. Id. at 1757-58.

ADNAS argues first that SmartWater has known from the outset that this case was doomed to fail on the legal merits, and instead has pursued litigation in order to harass a smaller competitor. ADNAS argues in essence that SmartWater could not have reasonably believed that ADNAS had infringed on SmartWater's patents because ADNAS's products are obviously distinct in relevant ways from SmartWater's patented processes. ADNAS's arguments, which are essentially about claim construction, are strong, and had the case continued forward, I might have found them persuasive. But I do not find that SmartWater's claims are "exceptional" in their weakness such that a fee award is appropriate.

ADNAS also argues that SmartWater's professed reasons for dropping the case at this stage are demonstrably false. For example, although SmartWater claims that ADNAS's financial condition is worse than it was at the outset of litigation two years ago, making recovery less likely, ADNAS argues that if anything it is on stronger footing than it was then. ADNAS also argues that the defection of a scientist and a purportedly new legal standard for induced infringement claims cannot explain SmartWater's decision to dismiss the case now. All of that may be so, but I do not find that SmartWater has displayed bad faith in the course of this litigation.

In sum, this case does not stand out in its legal merit (or lack thereof) or in the manner in which it has been conducted. I therefore decline to order fees under § 285.

The standards permitting me to sanction a party for frivolous or vexatious litigation (consistent with the American Rule) and under Rule 41(a)(2) are less specific and necessarily more difficult to meet than the "exceptional cases" standard of § 285. Because ADNAS has not demonstrated an entitlement to fees under § 285, it follows that no award is appropriate under Rule 41 or my inherent authority either.

The only remaining dispute in the case is the terms on which to dismiss SmartWater's claims. At oral argument on the motion to dismiss without prejudice, SmartWater represented that it was willing to dismiss its claims with prejudice, and that neither it nor any affiliated entity would sue any defendant based on alleged infringement of the patents here at issue arising from use of ADNAS's products. For reasons that are not clear to me (though the matter is much disputed on the docket), the parties have been unable to close the remaining gap and file a consented-to stipulation of dismissal. Therefore, SmartWater is hereby ordered, by September 3, 2014, to show cause why this case should not be dismissed with prejudice, and why I should not include in such an order the first, third, and fourth paragraphs of ADNAS's proposed dismissal order, Exhibit 1 to DE 133.

So ordered.

John Gleeson, U.S.D.J.

Dated: August 27, 2014
Brooklyn, New York